

Insects

On a warm spring day, you might spy the Common Brown Butterfly feeding on flowers and hear the loud trill of the Greengrocer Cicada at dusk.

In the eucalypt forests, the Imperial Jezebel lays her eggs on some mistletoe leaves, while the Green Stag Beetle chooses to lay hers inside a soft rotten log - soon their babies will hatch.

Over by the frog pond, the Wandering Ringtail Dragonfly shines beautifully blue on the still water surface.
